

Do you have what it takes?

We're looking for...

We're looking for passionate communicators who are interested in a flexible working opportunity.

If you have good language skills, you could be trained as a speech captioner for deaf and hearing impaired people.

You may never have thought of it, but your interest in language and communication could help give access to the hearing world that most of us take for granted.

Perhaps you're involuntarily out of the workforce, "retired", looking for a change or you want to work part-time.

We are an Australian company that provides access to deaf and hearing impaired people through captioning for television programming, conferences and a range of other projects.

Check out our training opportunities on our website.

How to apply

You can see if you have what it takes to become a speech captioner by taking our aptitude test online at www.ai-media.tv

You will be asked to register your name and details with us, then sent a link to complete the aptitude test.
